Words from HOD

Dear Friends,

Information Technology is one of the emerging computing disciplines. Nowadays Computers became essential work tools at every level of most organizations, and networked computer systems became the information backbone of organizations.

Information technology refers to undergraduate degree programs that prepare students to meet the computer technology needs of business, government, healthcare, schools, and other kinds of organizations.

IT is a new and rapidly growing field that started as a grassroots response to the practical, everyday needs of business and other organizations. Today, organizations of every kind are dependent on information technology. They need to have appropriate systems in place. These systems must work properly, be secure, and upgraded, maintained, and replaced as appropriate. Employees throughout an organization require support from IT staff that understand computer systems and their software and are committed to solving whatever computer-related problems they might have. Graduates of information technology programs address these needs.

Information technology professionals should be able to work effectively at planning, implementation, configuration, and maintenance of an organization's computing infrastructure.
